Clinical Observer Get-Together

International medical students in Juntendo University Faculty of Medicine Clinical Observership Program attended a small get-together.

Juntendo University Faculty of Medicine Clinical Observers during the get-together.

Juntendo University International Center held a small get-together to give all of the international medical students in the Clinical Observership Program a chance to meet on March 9, 2015. The Juntendo University Clinical Observership Program was designed to give participants a sneak peak into the clinical environment in Juntendo University Faculty of Medicine departments. Participants who attend usually have different daily schedules dependent on their department and different observership periods dependent on their time in Japan and are not always able to meet other observers.

Everyone gathered at Juntendo University International Center and then went for a short walk around Kagurazaka. The walk gave the students a chance to view Japanese architecture while getting the chance to get to know one another. Following the walk everyone had a quick meal together. Everyone who attended seemed to have a good time. As one clinical observer noted, the get-together had a warm atmosphere. ■
